WASHINGTON LETTER

WASHINGTON, October 12th, 1903.

POLITICIANS here believe there will be no currency legislation until after the presidential election. Representative Hill, of Connecticut ranking member of the last House committee on banking and currency, says that many Republicans are discussing a plan of submitting the question of financial legislation to a joint committee which will investigate the need of currency reforms and make recommendations to Congress. The Committee will either be named by Congress or appointed by the President from members of both houses. It is believed that Congress would pay little heed to a committee composed of outsiders. While it is not certain that Congress would accept the recommendations of the committee, its appointment is regarded as a wise move for several reasons. It would give the Republican factions an opportunity to argue their differences outside of the House, it might find a measure upon which they could all agree, and it would postpone any legislation on this difficult subject until after the presidential election. The party could thus go before the country without showing any lack of harmony. Secretary Shaw, Senator Aldrich and Representative Fowler all have different plans for currency reform, Speaker Cannon is not certain that any is needed, and the National Bankers' Association has recently appointed a committee to solve the problem. It is thought that these different interests should not be allowed to conflict in a session preceeding a presidential campaign. It is for the same reason that even those Republicans who favor it, have decided to postpone tariff revision. In the meantime Secretary Shaw is doing all he can to relieve any money stringency. Since September 1st he has placed in circulation a total of $22,274,500. He has done this by increasing the government deposits in the national banks and by the refunding and redemption operations now in progress. It is hoped that the Secretary can prevent a money stringency and thus remove all danger to the business world from the postponement of currency legislation.

With the adjournment last week of the Washington grand jury the first stage of the postal investigation was passed. There are now thirty persons awaiting trial on charges of defrauding the government through the Post Office Department. Against many of them there are several indictments; Machen must answer to fourteen and Beavers to six. Among those accused are a former postmaster general and six others who held important positions in the department, an ex-member of Congress and a state senator from New York, a Pennsylvania mayor and a number of private citizens who furnished supplies to the department. Most of the trials will take place in Washington and will begin this fall. They are expected to drag on through next summer. Mr. Bristow's report will soon be given to the President and the Postmaster General intimates that there will be several changes and dismissals in the department, made on the advice of those who have conducted the investigations This will end the investigation as far as the department is concerned. It is regarded as certain that the Republicans will call for a congressional investigation and as postal affairs are sure to enter politics the coming House committee on post officers and post roads will assume unusual importance. It is believed that Representative Overstreet of Indiana will be appointed to this important position, to which his experience as a politician and skill as a party leader seem to entitle him. He is secretary of the national Republican congressional committee. In this way the Republicans believe they will be able to meet the expected assaults of the Democrats on the Post Office Department.

From recent political gossip the following is interesting as showing the sentiment of some of the people of the South against President Roosevelt. Mayor Smyth of Charleston said in an interview, "The South has no candidates. It is anybody to bear Roosevelt, who is most cordially disliked on account of his attitude on the race question. Formerly he was popular with us. When he was in Charleston during the exposition he promised me, in the presence of two other gentlemen, that no colored man would be appointed to office in our state. He had hardly returned to Washington before he did the very thing he promised he would not do. Even if he named his two witnesses Mayor Smyth will have great difficulty in convincing anyone that President Roosevelt ever made him such a promise.

***

Last Thursday the President had as a guest at luncheon, Attorney Folk who has become famous through his relentless prosecution of the St. Louis boodlers. Plans were discussed for adding bribery to the list of crimes mentioned in the extradition treaties with foreign countries. Mr. Folk is deeply interested in such a measure as several of the men whom he had indicted have taken refuge in Canada or Mexico. He believed that the agreements with foreign countries should be made retroactive in order to make it possible to get possession of those who are already indicted. The President showed much enthusiasm for the plan and Secretary Hay was sent for, to whom Mr. Folk explained his case. The Secretary promised to take such steps as seemed practicable and as soon as possible.

USEFUL THINGS TO KNOW

Fruit stains may be removed if the goods is wet through with alcohol before going to the laundry.

A slate with pencil attached by a string should hang in every kitchen to aid the memory of the housewife.

The objection to brass or iron beds that draughts are noticeable is overcome by the use of dainty curtains at the head.

For marks made on painted woodwork by matches, try rubbing first with a slice of lemon, then with whiting, and in a few moments wash with warm soapsuds.

Pickle bottles and jars that smell of onions will be quite sweet and odorless after being left out of doors for three or four days filled with sand or garden mold.

If washed in cold water while quite fresh, milk and cream stains come out readily. To cleanse an article soiled with meat juice, wash first in cold water, then with warm water and soap.

Oxalic acid should be employed to remove iron rust. Wet the stained spot with cold water; pour on a strong solution of the acid; let stand a few minutes and rinse. When the stain has disappeared wash in ammonia water.

Lard will remove tar or wheel grease-Rub the spot with lard, as if washing, and when the stain is well out, rub between the hands in suds of soap and water until thoroughly cleansed.

Frequent washing with soap will dim the surface of a mirror. The occasional use of alcohol is recommended but for frequent washing, damp newspaper with a polishing with chamois skin will keep mirrors and glassware in good condition.

The cloths used in waxing floors or polishing furniture should be kept in a covered crock as long as clean, then, instead of letting them accumulate in closet or store room, burn them immediately, since vegetable oils are so liable to spontaneons combustion.

Sandpapering furniture is a tedious job, and the woman who wishes to revarnish or paint a chair or table will find her hands and patience saved if she will use one-third of a cupful of common washing soda to a pint of warm water, with a good scrubbing brush, to remove the old finish. Rinse off with clear water and do not attempt to put on the new coat until the piece is thoroughly dry.

Soft corns are frequently caused by carelessness in drying between the toes. A good system of treatment is this: Wash the feet every night in warm water and a little toilet disinfectant. Dry between the toes thoroughly, rubbing the corn for a few minutes with the towel. This will probably be rather painful, but rubbing the corn after it has been softened in the water has a tendency to reduce it. Then dust it thickly with a good boracic acid powder and place between the corn and the toe next it a piece of absorbent cotton, thickly covered with the powder. The wool will prevent pressure on the tender part.

OUTRAGED AND MURDERED

Mary Kosikoski, Aged Thirteen Years, Found Dead in a Ditch in Wilmington

FRANK SMITH UNDER ARREST

Having been assulted and then tossed into a ditch to try to conceal evidences of the atrocious crime, the body of thirteen-year-old Mary Kosikoski, an attractive little Polish girl of No. 123 Bradford street, South Wilmington, was discovered Monday morning by Clarence Spencer, a workman. In the afternoon Frank Smith, a Polander, who is a blue jacket on one of Uncle Sam's cruisers, was arrested by Detective Ratledge on suspicion of committing the assult and then hurling the girl into the water to give the affair the appearance of accidential drowning. Smith came to Wilmington recently on a leave of absence of a few days, and the fact that on Sunday he was but a few yards from where the murdered girl lives, and his past unfavorable record, caused the detectives to pounce upon him as the alleged assailant.

Held Without Bail

On a charge of felonious assault Smith was taken in city court Monday night, and was arraigned. He pleaded not guilty and his case was continued until Monday evening next, without bail. No evidence was taken in the case, the proceeding being merely a commitment on the one charge, which is the forerunner of another of murder that may be entered against him. He was taken back to a cell to await his further hearing.

There was a christening in South Wilmington Sunday night, at the home of a Polish family three doors from the Kosikoski home, and while her parents were at the festivities, where there was an abundance of beer, little Mary played around. At seven o'clock her father, Frank Kosikoski, gave her a piece of cake and she hastened further up the street to prepare a meal for a sick neighbor. After ten o'clock, when the christening celebration was waning, the father missed Mary, but thinking she was sleeping at the home of one of the neighbors, he retired with no fears of her safety.

Shortly after five o'clock Monday morning he was aroused to be told that the girl's body had been found by Spencer as he was on his way to the Lobdell Car Wheel works. The ditch into which the body was thrown is at the foot of B street, about 100 feet from the new Malleable iron plant and about two hundred yards from the Kosikoski home. There is an embankment skirting the ditch, and on this the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company has a siding.

The girl's body lay in three feet of water, but she was in such a position that her head rested against the shore, and just above the surface of the stream. Her underclothing was gathered about her feet, and part of this floating toward the surface and the upturned face of the drowned girl made the ghastly spectacle that confronted Spencer as he was walking leisurely to his work at the river front.

Spencer sought the police and residence in the neighborhood were aroused. They immediately recognized the lifeless form as that of Mary Kosikoski, a general favorite in the uncouth Polish community. The body was removed to the girl's home not far away, where an expert examination was made by physicians later in the day.

Parents Prostrated

When notified of the finding of the body Mr. and Mrs. Kosikoski, parents of the ravished girl, were about prostrated with grief, the mother especially, moaning like a mad woman all day, and refusing the comforting advances of neighbors.

Chief of Police Black, and Detectives Francis and Ratledge, with many policemen, immediately began an investigation of the crime, and found but little evidence of a struggle about the embankment where the body was found. The cinders showed no signs of a scuffle, but a side comb and a safety pin that had been worn by the girl were found a short distance away from the spot where she was found.

The fact that there were no marks of violence on the girl led the police to believe that the assault was committed near her home, and that her body was carried to the ditch and there thrown down the embankment. They believe that the girl was unconscious after being assaulted, and was in that condition when she was hurled into the water.

Smith at Christening

With the aid of Patrolman Jakubowski, a Polish officer, the detectives learned of the christening party, and getting a list of the guests they say they found that Frank Smith, the blue jacket, was in the party. Patrolman Jakubowski remembered that Smith had a record, which he imparted to the detectives, and they determined to arrest the sailor on suspicion, at any rate. Later in the day they gathered a few bits of information that strengthened their suspicions toward Smith.

In the afternoon at 2.30 o'clock he was found by Detective Ratledge, who was accompanied by Officer Jakubowski, in a pool room on Market street near Front. He was attired in the regulation uniform of a blue jacket, and his cap bore the inscription "U. S. S. Nevada." Recently Smith says he has been on a torpedo boat. He was accused by Chief of Police Black and by Detective Ratledge of having assaulted the girl and then throwing her into the water to conceal the original crime, but he denied the accusations vigorously. He was somewhat surly and called Chief of Police Black a "liar" when confronted with the charge. Smith was placed in a special cell on the second floor, and no charge was entered against him on the docket until late in the afternoon.

PROF. WOOD DEAD

The following notice of the death of Professor Hudson A. Wood is taken from the Christian Advocate, of New York City. Thirty-one years ago Professor Wood was principal of what was then "The Middletown Academy." He prepared a large class for the various colleges, and under his direction the "Academy" reached high water mark in its history. When he resigned to take a chair as professor of mathamatics in the School of Languages in New York City, the Academy gradually declined, and finally was merged in the public schools.

The same old bell, in the same old belfry, still calls to task and duty, in the same old voice and the same old way. But where now is that happy throng of boys and girls that answered to its charming call of thirty years ago? "They have all dispersed and wandered far away, far away." But wherever they be, they will learn with sorrow the death of their old preceptor, and will drop a tear in memory of him and the "tender grace of a day that is dead."

Professor Hudson A. Wood, Ph. D., of Mount Vernon, N. Y., died on Monday, September 28th, at the age of sixty-two years. He was a graduate of Michigan University, and was for many years Professor of Mathematics in Stevens Institute, Hoboken, N. J. As a member of the Sixty-first Regiment of New York he saw active service in the civil war and was wounded in battle. During his teaching life he had been deeply interested in mission work and in reform causes. His later years were passed in retirement because of failing health. Though himself a member, like his wife, of the Presbyterian Church, the two sons are Methodists—one, Everett N., a worker in Chester Hill Church, Mount Vernon; the other, Victor A., a member of Newark Conference, now Stationed at Milford, Pa. The funeral services on Thursday were conducted by the Rev. Herbert Welch and the Rev. Charles L. Mead, of Hoboken.

The Standard Rotary

. . Two in One Sewing Machine . .

The construction of the machine, fully protected by letters patent, is such that with the smooth, easy and quiet running qualities there is also an accuracy and uniformity of stitch and tension that are not equalled by any vibrating shuttle machine on the market, in fact the VERY FIRST stitch in starting to sew is perfect without the tnead ends, the finest goods are not puckered. Seam ends can be fastened by reversing the machine which does not cause the thread to break as other machines do. Change of speed, size of thread or thickness of goods do not cause any charge of tension, but the tensions remain even and the stitch elastic.

The shuttle has one continuous motion from start to stop, while in a vibrating machine the shuttle stops and starts two times for every stitch made, thus losing much valuable time which is gained in the Rotary machine by the continuous motion, by reason of which one-third more speed is acquired and therefore as much work done on a Rotary machine in two thirds of a day as can be done in a whole day on a vibrating shuttle machine; besides this, the stops and starts of a vibrating shuttle machine cause additional noise, jar and wear on the machine and frequently irregular tensions.

Skipping stitches and needle breaking. By the use of a very short, firm needle and an accurate and precise shuttle movement the annoyance of needle breaking and stitch dropping are avoided.

We expect to tell you a few additional facts next week and in the meantime MR. J. H. EMERSON, UNDERTAKER and FURNITURE DEALER will be pleased to show you the Standard Machine at Middletown, Del. Call on or write him.

Men's Fall Overcoats and Rain Coats

When in doubt where to buy, look around and compare values.

Most stores make such big claims that there ought to be fine merit everywhere in this Fall's clothing stock.

But loud claims aren't everything. It takes a fine tailoring plant to produce fine results. Oak Hall has a host of skilled tailors.

Come in and look around. 'Twould do your heart good to see how we do things—thousands of overcoats ready—and the materials on hand for thousands more.

Some examples of good overcoat making:

$7.50—Covert top coat, 34 inches long, dark Oxford cheviot, Italian cloth lining, outside breast pocket.

$10—Oxford mixed overcoat, 34 inches long, of dark green cheviot, whipcord effect, substantially lined with serge; satin sleeve lining; outside breast pocket.

$12—Medium length overcoat, dark Oxford cheviot, lined with Venetian, satin sleeve linings.

$15—Medium length overcoat, of dark Oxford cheviot, silk-lined throughout. The best value we have ever given at this price.

$18—Medium length overcoat, black unfinished worsted, silk-lined to edge—very rich.

$25—Medium length overcoat of rich dark brown overcoating, silk-lined throughout. Nothing finer in ready-to-wear overcoats can be had.

RAIN COATS—The sort young men are hungry for—and oldish men, too; $13.50 and $20. If they don't shed water bring them back.

Women's Suits—Two Specials

Mr. Theodore Kumpel has sold his farm situated on the East end of Middletown, containing 18 acres, to Mr. John W. Isaacs, of Blackbird, for a consideration of $3,400. This is one of the finest small farms in St. Georges hundred, and an ideal truck farm. Mr. Isaacs will move to his new home in the early spring.

Mr. Charles P. Cochran received 12 very handsome Rhode Island Red hens from one of the best poultry yards of Pennsylvania this week. Mr. Cochran has gone to considerable expense in building houses, yards, etc., for his thoroughbreds, and his fowls have been selected with much care, and are as fine as can be found anywhere.

Ten dollars a month on a farm is better than twenty dollars a month in a store. As a general thing at the end of ten months the farmer boy has $75 in cash, three pairs of overalls and a straw hat, while the city or town chap has two or three suits of clothes, a pair of golf socks, and is $17 in the hole. Yet there are 75 applicants for the lattter job to one of the former—Ex.

The J. C. Parker & Son Co., had an Exhibit of the celebrated Diamond State brand of harness at the Carriage Dealers' Exposition which was held in Philadelphia this week, and we are informed their display was one of the prettiest at the Exposition. Messrs. W. R. Parker, Abram Hayden and Harry R. Layfield had charge of the booth and they are highly elated over the numerous orders received for their firm.

As to the dance at Odessa on Thursday night, Oct. 15th, it was a very enjoyable affair and the young people appreciated it. The maskers did not turn out in the numbers expected. But the character "of a negro dandy" was well represented and was awarded the premium of $3.00 which was presented to him through the hands of one of our graceful little girls, the youngest one present; (except an infant in the arms of its mother).

A horse belonging to Mr. Paul Weber, and attached to a dearborn, caused considerable excitement on East Main street, Wednesday afternoon. The horse became frightened by a trolley car and after a few lunges Mr. Talbot Williams and little Clarence Weber who were in the vehicle were thrown out, and the horse proceeded on its way after freeing itself from the wagon. Master Clarence was badly bruised about the face and head but fortunately was not seriously injured.

One of the severest storms in twenty years visited the Atlantic Coast last Thursday, Friday and Saturday, that carried in its wake thousands of dollars of destruction. Atlantic City, Ocean City, N. J., Rehoboth, Del., and Ocean City, Md., were among the resorts that were more or less damaged. Most of the destruction was caused by the high tide, which rose to an enormous height and carried away property nearest to the shore. In this locality the damage was comparatively slight.

Until further notice the Middletown Public Library will be open on Tuesday and Saturday afternoons from 3.30 to 5, and Saturday evenings, from 7 to 8.30.

On and after Monday next, October 19th, the mail between Odessa and Middletown will be carried on the trolley cars. Heretofore the pouches have been carried by the stage. There will be four mails daily from Odessa and three to Odessa. By the new arrangement the last mail will leave Odessa at 8.30 P. M., to connect with the south-bound midnight express. Letters and mail matter leaving Odessa by this arrangement will reach Philadelphia by the early Norfolk express, about 5 o'clock.

Dr. T. H. Gilpin gave a delightful graphophone concert at his residence on West Main street last Friday evening, and after spending a few hours socially, the guests were invited to the dining-room where refreshments were served. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Pool, Mr. and Mrs. George G. Rowe, Mr. and Mrs. Jessie L. Shepherd, Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Barnard, Mrs. Rose Kennedy, Mrs. Fannie Lockwood, the Misses Foard, Miss May Holten, Miss E. Nora Armstrong, Miss Bernice Metten, the Misses Rowe, William Brady, Walter Leatherbury, Rev. Dr. F. H. Moore, Dr. Charles Gilpin, Col. Joseph Hanson, George Janvier and W. G. Lockwood.

By upseting a lamp at the residence of Mr. D. R. Rees, at the Willow Grove Mills Wednesday evening, Bertha Hazelton, colored, was quite severely burned and it was with much difficulty the dwelling was saved from destruction. With her clothing in a waving mass of flames the girl sprang from the room into the yard and would have probably been burned to death had it not been for a colored man who came to her assistance and smothered the flames in time to save her life. In the mean time the matting in the room where the accident occurred had ignited, but the flames were soon extenguished by one of Mr. Rees' sons, at the time the accident occurred Mr. and Mrs. Rees were absent, and they did not reach home for several hours after the trouble was over.

ROGERS--HUKILL

A very pretty home wedding was quietly solemnized on Wednesday afternoon, October 14th, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Hukill, Cass street, this town, when Miss Jessie Margaret Hukill became the bride of Mr. Richard James Rogers. To the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march promptly at two o'clock, the bride entered the parlor on the arm of her father, who gave her in marriage, passing through an aisle formed by white ribbon held by three brothers and a cousin, to a place in front of the mantel where they were met by the groom. "Tim" the little brother of the bride, was ring bearer. Rev. Mr. Wyatt pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church performed the ceremony. The bride was handsomely gowned in a traveling dress of blue broadcloth tailor-made, and white beaver hat with long plume. She carried white chrysanthemums.

Miss Frances Aspril cousin of the bride, played the wedding march. The guests numbered about thirty-five, only the immediate relatives being present. After congratulations the company repaired to the dining-room where a bountiful collation was spread. The entire house was beautifully decorated, flowers being every where. The mantels in parlor and dining-room were banked with yellow dahlias and asparagus, the color scheme of yellow and white being carried out in both rooms. The dining table was made beautiful with a large centre piece of yellow dahlias and smilax. The presents were useful and handsome, quite a number being sent to Oceanic, N. J., their future home. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers left on the 4.17 north bound train and will be at home after November 12th.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The first annual session of the St. Georges Hundred Sunday School Convention was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church of Port Penn, on Thursday afternoon and evening. The programe was excellent in conception and remarkably well rendered. In the afternoon Rev. C. T. Wyatt, D. D., of Middletown, thrilled the audience with a masterly address on "Missing Links in the Sunday School." A helpful conference on "The Prize System, It's Uses and Abuses" was ed by the Rev. N. W. Davis, of Port Penn, and participated in by Revs. Wyatt, Franklin, Arters and others. Primary work was intelligently discussed by Mr. William Carnegie, of Red Lion. The music in charge of the local choir was excellent throughout the services.

In the evening the Rev. J. Edgar Franklin of Wilmington was the principal speaker. He admirably handled the subject "Qualifications for a Sunday School Teacher," and so clearly defined was his argument that everybody was inspired to new interest in Sunday School work. Rev. J. M. Arters spoke on the subject "What Shall We Do With That Boy?"

The credit for this successful convention belongs to the President, Mr. Wm. McMullin, Jr., of Port Penn, who has been continued in office for another year.

TO RE-OPEN ELWOOD CASE

Baltimore Synod of the Presbyterian Church, in session, adopted a resolution Wednesday directing the Presbytery of New Castle, to reconsider the case of the Rev. Robert A. Elwood, of Wilmington. A committee of the Synod recommended approval of the New Castle action, and Mr. Elwood, who is a delegate to the Synod, took the floor to say that he is willing to abide by any action of the body.

The Synod at first sustained the New Castle Presbytery, 36 to 26. Later, the Synod directed the rehearing of the case by the New Castle Presbytery.

If the Presbytery decide to consider the Elwood case before the regular Spring meeting, it is probable that they will meet in the Forest Presbyterian Church, Middletown.

REVIVAL MEETINGS

The Salvation Army Brigade now at work at the M. E. Church, are attracting interesting crowds. Much interest is manifested and conversions are reported. The singing of the Jones sisters is greatly enjoyed and is a great help to the spirit of revival. To-night the Brigade will give their thrilling Stereopticon service, "Around the World with the Salvation Army." 250 beautiful dissolving Lime Light views with a special program of music will be given, of which the Rev. William L. White, pastor of St. John's M. E. Church, Seaford, says: "The Stereopticon entertainment given by the Salvation Army last Saturday evening in Seaford was vastly superior to the ordinary entertainment of that kind. The large audience was thrilled by the life like pictures which portrayed the work of the Army. To be commended this exhibition needs only to be seen. Pleasure and profit wait upon all who attend." To aid the work of the Army a silver offering will be taken at the door. It is hoped that all will contribute liberally. Sunday three great meetings will be held at 10.30 A. M., 3 and 7.30 P. M.

Large audiences gathered at Bethesda M. E. Church last Sunday to hear Staff Captain Kemp and his assistants. Three services were held during the day and they were greatly enjoyed by the congregations, the singing of the Jones sisters being most appealing. Captain Kemp spoke at length on the social and spiritual work, stating that their object was to reach the unchurched; that in doing so they used methods different from the churches. They beat a drum, but on the same principle that the church rang the bell, namely to call the people together; they wore uniforms as military evangelists; he considered all pastors wore uniforms. You know a minister when you see him by the uniform he wears. The methods used were only a means to an end—to reach the masses. They had no new doctrines, they preached Christ and Him crucified. Their work was carried on in 49 countries and colonies by 15,000 commissioned officers or evangelists; salvation was preached in 31 languages: 250,000 persons professed conversion each year. In their social work to help the poor, to ont of home and workless classes, they had factories, workshops, farm colonies, prison-gate homes for ex-criminals, rescue homes for unfortunate women, 7,000 passing through annually. Many pathetic incidents moving the people to tears were told while the Jones sisters told the Story of Rescue in sweet song.

RESOLUTIONS AGAINST BRIBERY

The Presbytery of New Castle met on last Wednesday during the recess of the Synod at the Church of the Covenant in Washington, and the Rev. Francis H. Moore, D. D., chairman of the committee, appointed by Presbytery to draft suitable resolutions rgainst bribery, presented the report of the committee. The committee consisted of Francis H. Moore, D. D., Thomas A. McCurdy, D. D., and the Rev. John McElroy. The resolutions which were unanimously adopted by Presbytery, after recognizing the teaching of the Confession of Faith concerning separation of Church and State, reads:

"We are not unmindful of one great function of the Church, that of witnessing for the truth and against all unrighteousness, wherever found. This testimony is to be borne by the steady and unfailing proclamation of the truth as it is in Jesus—the only remedy for the ills and evils of society, and by lives in harmony with this truth, manifesting righteousness in all duties sacred and secular, and in all relations, individual, social and civil.

"In harmony with these principles the Presbytery of New Castle views with alarm the widespread and increasing evil, not only within our borders, but throughout our country of the corrupt and corrupting use by individuals and parties, of money in furtherance of their ambitions, resulting in the demoralization of the community and in the debauching of the public conscience.

"We unhesitatingly and without reserve condemn all such practices as sin which is a reproach to any people, as crime against that righteousness which exalteth a nation, and as a serious menace to the progress of the Kingdom of Christ.

"We therefore urge the ministers and members of our Churches, and all citizens within the limits of New Castle Presbytery, to let their influence and their efforts tell to the utmost in directing public sentiment against this iniquity, and in the prompt securing of such effective legislation as shall result in the unhindered spread of temperance and sobriety, political morality and righteousness throughout our bounds."

Queen Quality

Shoes are worn by over Two Million .... Women ....

An Explanation

"Queen Quality" is not a three dollar Shoe. It should not be classed with three dollar Shoes. It has nothing in common with three dollar Shoes. Most styles of "Queen Quality" are sold at three dollars, yet it is the worth-equal, the style-equal, the fit-equal of a custom shoe. Now, how is it possible to sell "Queen Quality" shoes for three dollars? Simply and only because of the Money saved by Wholesale handling. The quantity of these shoes made and sold is enormous---very much the largest in the world.

Note that there is only one price on "Queen Quality" everywhere. Many a dealer could ask and obtain more for them, but the price is fixed by the factory, and must not be raised. The woman who once tries "Queen Quality" shoes will rarely ever accept any other shoe. They spell the word Satisfaction.

MARGOT MAUDE

To Addie's scornful rejoinder Mr. Chesteron paid little attention. The fear of being married for his money had always been very real to him. He thought how many girls, well-born but poor, had been hurled at his head by their worldly-minded mothers, and also how eagerly they would have vowed to love, honor and obey him. By a mere accident however he had come across a girl to whom his wealth was a matter of indifference—whose chief wish was to rid herself of him.

For the present, I will give you your own way, he told her. I will say nothing, but—I intend to call here until I have made your mother and sister look upon me as a friend.

We never receive visitors.

I shall ask your mother's permission to come sometimes, Aldwyth returned, and unless you object she will not refuse.

She will expect me to tell you that, with our small means, receiving company is impossible.

I intend to have my own way in this, Chesteron asserted. Come, I have given in all along the line and am going to be silent. Adelaide, I will made a bargain with you. If you will treat me as a friend and allow me to come here when I wish I will hold my tongue until you give me leave to speak.

You will never tell them?

Not until you give me leave.

You will not come very often?

I will give no promise about that. One thing more I must ask—will you give up trying to save that money? It is madness, Addie! For their sakes you have no right to ruin your health by working without any recreation. I won't bother you at present about accepting a greater allowance, but don't strive to hoard up that money. If we never come any nearer or if in a few years you are in a position to earn sufficient to do without help from me, then you may begin to repay it. But I swear I will not take it now—and you are killing yourself and making your mother and sister wretched.

I don't think I could give it up—Addie spoke low and nervously—It has been my only comfort.

It is a very selfish one! Had you seen your mother's face when she said "Addie looks so tired," you would think I was right.

Poor mother—and Monica! I could brighten their lives—yes, I will do as you suggest. I believe that in a year or two I shall get on.

Without working preposterously hard?

Yes. Then I will repay you.

Then you agree. In return for silence you will make these two promises?

I suppose I must, Addie replied rather ungraciously. I don't want them to know, but I can't see why you want to come here. I suppose it is a novelty to you to see how the poor live, she added bitterly. Well, gratify your own wishes and come if you choose.

Thank you—I will.

That is all you wish to say?

At present—yes.

Addie walked to the door and called "Monica!"

Yes! Do you want me, Addie?

We have finished our business—that is all. I think Mr. Chesteron would like to say good-bye to you before he goes.

I will be with you directly.

I am afraid I can't pretend to misunderstand that hint, laughed Aldwyth. I will go as soon as I have said good-bye to your mother and sister.

After this interview Aldwyth visited the little house in Alexander Row two or three times a week, never staying very long, although Monica was fond of making him tea, and afterwards—when she knew him better—insisting, with friendly peremptoriness, on setting him to toast bread and help her in laying the table. He soon became very friendly with her, and Mrs. Delahay too welcomed his visits. Addie frowned when Chesteron brought little offerings of flowers and fruit for Mrs. Delahay, and sweets—even gloves—for Monica.

I dislike to see you bring things! I never agreed to that! she declared.

I never offer you anything, retorted Chesteron, be content with that!

I am not. It is not right for my sister to accept everything you choose to bring her.

You are awfully hard on Monica! Aldwyth knew the way to make Addie doubt her own judgment.

Hard on Monica!

Yes. You wilfully debar her from the innocent pleasures enjoyed by other girls of her age and without half her attractions.

She is perfectly happy as she is, Addie returned angrily. Don't spoil her. I must tell her not to take your presents.

Do; then I shall ask you, before your mother and sister, to give me your reason for disliking me and not treating me as a friend.

Bah! The girl turned away. It is not possible to argue with you. Your motive is simply and solely to get your own way.

The weeks passed, but Aldwyth called with unfailing regularity. He had not stayed so long in town for some years; but summer was approaching, and in August no one but those compelled to do so stays in London. Then he, too, would go, Addie assured herself.

July was very hot, and the sisters were thankful when the holidays came. One morning Aldwyth proposed an outing on the river, and Monica's pleading face showed the intense disappointment she would feel if Addie refused. So they went. What a perfect day it was! How much they enjoyed the thorough rest in the fresh air—watching the sunlight on the water and the dancing lights through the trees! Monica and Chesteron talked gaily, and Addie was allowed to maintain a contented silence.

Aldwyth treated Monica with a brotherly friendship which she seemed to like, and she in her turn chaffed and teased him. Somehow or other she had managed to learn a good many facts about his life and talked of his friends, and his journeys, and even of his love affairs, with an audacious accuracy which amazed Addie. He had kept his promise very well and did not often offend. Now and again he lectured Addie—very often they quarrelled—but even she, had she owned the truth, would have admitted that his visits, when they ceased, would be missed.

She found him very different from her former estimate of his character. He was genuine and unaffected, very generous and unselfish—a goodly list of virtues for one's enemy. Then came August and with it their next serious disagreement. One day, in Addie's absence, Chesteron calmly proposed that they should all come to stay with him in a small fishing village where he had a cottage bungalow. Mrs. Delahay, at first staggered with the idea, was silenced by his plausible reasoning—that the girls wanted a change so badly! Monica welcomed the plan with her usual, careless, unthinking fervor, and the matter was broached at tea time cautiously and with a certain diffidence by Chesteron.

You propose that we should stay with you at Netherton? demanded Addie.

Yes. What do you think of the proposition?

I will tell you after tea.

A stormy discussion ended in Adelaide's complete triumph. She would not go to any house of his and would not allow her mother and sister to go. She was amazed at his suggesting such a plan which was quite contrary to their agreement. Addie was determined—he was obstinate, and at length he left the house in a rage.

Chesteron wrote a short note to Mrs. Delahay, saying that, as Adelaide seemed to consider the proposition outrageous, he supposed it must fall through. He received a reply stating that, although the writer was grateful for his kindly thought of them, the plan was hardly feasible and must, with many thanks from all, be abandoned, but she hoped to see him again soon to thank him for his many kindnesses.

He did not go near them however for a month, and they did not know where he was. Then, about the beginning of September, he came in quite unexpectedly, to be welcomed with open joy by Monica, and unmistakable pleasure by her mother. Even Addie smiled when she came in and found him there.

You have forgiven me, then? she asked half-teasingly, when they were alone for a moment.

No.

For once I had my own way. But—I was angry at the time, and I think needlessly ungracious. After all, you meant to be kind, and I need not have been so rude. I was ashamed afterwards when I remembered some of the things I said. Will you please believe that I am sorry?

Now I will forgive you, he replied, although it has spoiled my whole summer to know that you were stifling here, but—I will forgive you.

That is very good of you.

Do you know that you are looking better than before I went away? Chesteron remarked. You are not quite so thin or so pale.

We went down to Eastbourne for ten days, she remarked, smiling. I had some money, and Monica was so disappointed at your invitation being refused that I had to atone to her in some way. We enjoyed the holiday so much, and it has done mother a world of good. In a sense we went with your money—that which I had saved to repay you. You see I have kept my word. There is very little of it left, and I am not doing much extra work besides the art class.

Then Monica came in and began to order Chesteron about as usual.

Here, lazybones, she said authoritatively, why have you not cleared those books off the table? Take this tray!—and she put it into his hands and left him with it while she cleared the table. I am sure it must be good for you to do a little useful work sometimes! declared Monica disdainfully. I feel it to be my duty to see that you do it!

Have I ever objected to you doing so? he inquired meekly. Aren't you turning on a faithful servant?

Oh, you are a good enough boy sometimes! the girl allowed airily.

Monica!

Don't scold her! laughed Aldwyth. It is the effect of the Eastbourne air.

After that he and Addie seemed to get on better together. She gave way more as he ceased to give her cause for defying him. If he had really been only the friend he seemed she could not have helped liking him, she thought. He was so cheerful—so good to her mother and Monica.

CHAPTER IX

One evening, a few weeks later, Addie, looking unusually bright, came in to find Chesteron there, at which she raised her eyebrows.

I know—I was here yesterday! he admitted. Don't be so inhospitable!

The girl laughed and turned to her mother.

I have got good news, mother! she exclaimed gaily. I have sold the four sketches which you liked so much for fifteen pounds!

Hurrah! cried Monica. Why, we shall be quite rich soon, Addie! Did old Benton actually give that? How amazing!

Well, it seems that a certain Colonel Gray has bought several of my sketches. He happened to be in the shop to-day when I went in, and I heard him say, "Have you got any more of Miss Delahay's work?" So I went forward and told him that I had brought some sketches if he cared to look at them, at which he seemed very pleased, and bought all four of them. Benton looked angry, and I wondered why until Colonel Gray turned to him and said, "The same price? That will be twenty pounds for the four."

And he pays you thirty shillings!

Yes. I said nothing; but when he had gone, Benton looked rather ashamed of himself; he said that my work had improved very much of late, and that he should give me fifteen pounds, as of course he must have a commission.

What a pity you can't sell them to Colonel Gray direct! remarked Monica.

Yes—it does seem a pity. Colonel Gray gave me his card, and I thought——

You must not try that! Chesteron interrupted. You can't either go or write to men of whom you know nothing.

For once Addie did not avail herself of an occasion to quarrel.

Never mind now, she said good-temperedly. I feel too pleased to-day to argue.

We really ought to do something to celebrate the occasion, Addie, said Monica.

Let me take you to a theatre, Aldwyth suggested.

Oh, Addie, don't say "No"! We can go to cheap seats and pay for them ourselves! Do—there's a darling!

Well—and Addie agreed rather reluctantly—if Mr. Chesteron will consent to go to cheap seats—the pit or upper circle—we will go. But you will miss your dinner, she remarked, looking at him.

We will have something to eat when we come home! declared Monica joyfully. Oh, how lovely to think of going to a theatre! Where shall we go?

She was allowed her choice, and then the girls went to get ready, leaving Mrs. Delahay delighted that they were going to enjoy themselves.

I shall ask Mrs. Webb just to look in, said Monica. She is a good-natured little body. Our next-door neighbor, explanatorily to Chesteron—a cobbler's wife, and a great friend of mine.

You must introduce me, he returned calmly, but with a twinkle in his eyes. Monica very seldom managed to get a rise out of him.

On arriving at the theatre Chesteron was rather amused when he found himself packed into a crowded upper circle. The place was very full, but they had luckily got some seats—forfeited at the last moment—in the second row, and he had never before been with ladies to anything but the stalls or private boxes. Monica looked the picture of happiness, no shade of discontent mingling with her bliss. She was in a theatre—that was sufficient for her; if she was not in the higher-priced seats, where other girls, no better born nor one whit more charming, were congregated, that did not apparently affect her, and she looked round with beaming good nature. Aldwyth sat between the sisters and listened to all Monica's comments with open amusement, answering her many questions to the best of his ability. Even Addie looked excited and had a faint pink flush in her cheeks.

The piece, Chesteron thought, possessed little merit, but to the girls it was enchanting. Monica wept with the unfortunate heroine, and rejoiced with the comic man. The seats were narrow, and the theatre very hot, but to such trifles as these she was quite oblivious. Addie, too, seemed unwilling to take her eyes from the stage.

When the piece was half over, and the audience were flatteringly intent, a faint murmur arose—at first drawing forth a few peremptory hushes from the upper part of the house, but growing louder, until at last a distinct call of "Fire! fire! sounded through the building, accompanied by a smell of burning. The audience rose; the din became tremendous; and the people, never stopping to consider—never pausing to think that far more dangerous than the fire was the risk of getting crushed to death in the narrow passages—jostled and pushed each other, giving no heed to any words of advice or common sense.

Next to Monica was a great burly fellow, who, utterly indifferent to the fate of anyone else, pushed his way forward, catching the girl first with his elbow, then with his foot as he stepped across the back of the seat. The girl, terrified, excited, and sick with the pain of the blow, turned giddy; her head reeled; and, with a despairing grasp at Chesteron, she fell to the floor insensible.
